The end.....

This blog is now inactive, and has been moved to a new 'members only' blog. It's been fun (!), and to paraphrase:

"The blog is dead..... Long live the blog"

Vivaldi - The Four Seasons

Donate

What's it all about?

This blog was an open window on one of my hobbies, that being - Quadraphonic Sound. Unsure what that is?, then follow the link.

This is a list of recordings I have in my collection, from self decoded albums using my own developed, accurate decoding process's

The Decode Process's

The two main 'matrix' quadraphonic systems were SQ and QS and, in the 70's, were decoded using hardware decoders. There have been none manufactured since then, so we've needed to find another way to decode these albums.

It has become easier to do this using the powerful computers we have nowadays, and although there have been previous attempts to decoded them, there has always been issues regarding phase errors, poor seperation, poor image placement etc.

During October of 2011 I decided to take a fresh look at correcting these issues, and in November started releasing albums in the new process's, "SQ*Final" and "QS-Final".

To celebrate SQ*Final's first birthday, I decided to improved it using principles developed while working on decoding the EV & DY matrix systems. This is called SQ*Final/I.

At the begining of 2013 I created the //I processes, which are superiour in every way to any other form of decoding SQ & QS, including hardware

Pinchas Zukerman and The English Chamber Orchestra recorded this superb reading of what must be Vivaldi's most popular work, great in stereo but given real life in quad. Full marks to the recording and mixdown team for capturing this brilliant performance.

Changes are a foot...

It's become obvious that changes will need to be made the way the blog operates.

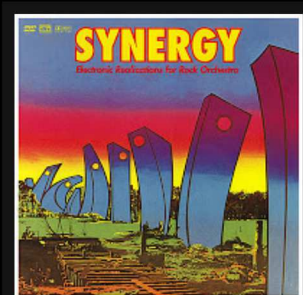

Please take a second to do the poll to the right as it's the only way i can think of that will make the blogs future a viability

I've added an extra poll for those who voted NO.

Keith Jarrett - Treasure Island

One of my favourite Jarrett albums from his time at 'Impulse', and one i've never really felt showed it's true quality when it came to decoding it.

With the new process i believe it's now possible to hear how the musicians were placed in the studio, the first track in particular showing great placement of all the instruments, including the percussion.

Comments on this new decode are welcomed

Lou Reizner & London Symphony Orchestra - Tommy

With this new conversion, i really do believe that justice has finally been done to this album.

This is Lou Reizner's star studded production of The Who's opus "Tommy". with performances from: Pete Townsend, Sandy Denny, Graham Bell, Steve Winwood, Maggie Bell, Richie Havens, Merry Clayton, Roger Daltrey, John Entwistle, Ringo Starr, Rod Stewart, Richard Harris and The London Symphony Orchestra

On a personal note, i've always felt there were parts that cried out for the inclusion of Rick Wakeman's keyboards

This release was only made possible by the involvement of the following:
 Paul Garfunkel: Purchasing and making the album available for conversion
 Dr Robert: Lp rip
 Lokkerman: Co-ordination
 OxfordDickie: Restoration, etc

John Keating - Space Experience

I make no excuses for re-releasing this in the new decode process version. This process is as good as i believe it is possible to get decoding SQ, and that included all hardware decoders (to date).

The improved image stability, solidity and separation make this process the closest to achieving discrete reproduction, and this classic album is just perfect to show it off.

Joe Walsh - So What (Unreleased Quad Mix)

Although listed as being a quad release, it ended being one of two that Command never actually released. But one encoded track did appear on a Koss Headphone quadraphonic promo album, and that's the only proof that the mix existed, until now.

This is a new version of this album, the first to be decoded with a new process that is the most accurate ever, hardware included. After extensive testing, i firmly believe this is as far as is possible to go with this matrix system.

Separation, image placement & stability, etc, are greatly improved, showing that for the first time, QS is finally capable of standing shoulder to shoulder with SQ.

Caravan - BBC Live In Concert

This show was recorded at the Paris Theatre on the 21st March 1975, and broadcast on BBC Radio 1's 'In Concert'.

When i first of heard this, i questioned whether this was a matrix encoded recording, as it wasn't the one that was used for the KBFH (British Biscuit) broadcast, and i could find no record of it having been used by the transcription service.

Of course, records of all these shows that were done by the them are far from complete. On first listening to it in stereo, it didn't sound like a normal SQ encoded recording, but more like QS. After testing, it proved to be QS encoded, all four channels were in phase (something that wouldn't happen if it was stereo) with a front heavy mix, the rears used for audience and ambiance along with some keyboard sounds.

I thought this may indeed be the QS version (the shows were available in SQ & QS) of a Transcription Service show, but looking further, there's also the possibility it's actually one of the BBC's early quad tests, before they settled on developing their own matrix system - Matrix H

Either way, it's a piece of history.....

To celebrate SQ*Final's first birthday, I decided to improved it using principles developed while working on decoding the EV & DY matrix systems. This is called SQ*Final/I.

At the begining of 2013 I created the /II processes, which are superiour in every way to any other form of decoding SQ & QS, including hardware

Many of the BBC's live 'In Concert' stereo broadcasts during the 1970's were remixed into quad by the BBC's Transcription Service for the American broadcasters that were experimenting with quad broadcasting at the time, the biggest being 'The King Biscuit Flour Hour'. where the BBC's shows were broadcast under the banner 'The British Biscuit'

One show i've been tracking down is a show by Barclay James Harvest that was recorded on the 22nd June 1974 at the Hippodrome, Golders Green in London and was broadcast (minus one track) in stereo a few days later on Radio Ones 'In Concert' show.

The show was then re-mixed (this time complete with the missing track) by the transcription service in quad.

It recently came to my notice that this concert had been released on CD in its entirety, so in the hope of finally getting my hands on this rarity, i acquired a copy. What a disappointment!

They had used the UK broadcast master (stereo) and spliced in the missing track from the SQ encoded master. What a total waste of an opportunity!!!!

So, as a taster of what could have been, i've decoded the 10 minute long track and have created a standard DVD-A/V. To save wasting a disc, it might be best to use a DVD-RW.

Rosenman-Chamber Music No.2 & Kraft-Des Imagistes

This is not exactly "whistle a happy tune" classical music, and it may be a good idea to start with the second piece on this album, the William Kraft composition 'Des Imagistes'. This piece for percussion and voice is performed around the audience, making it a good choice for quadraphonic sound. Also, the voices move about making it a good example of imaging if your speakers are timed or arranged properly.

From the point of view of quadraphonic history, this is, alas, the only quad album issued by the audiophile label Delos. It's almost as if their engineers were given a new toy, and quad mixer and encoder, to play with and they went nuts.

After your ears have tuned to the Kraft, you may want to give yourself some time with the Rosenman piece if only to listen to the audio engineering, and who knows this eclectic 20th Century idiom may grow on you.

Don Sebesky - Giant Box

This may have been Creed Taylor's most ambitious single project, thankfully the music making lives up to the billing. Everything that gave CTI its distinctive sound and identity is here, the classical adaptations, elaborate orchestrations and structuring, pop-tune covers, with plenty of room for the star soloists to stretch out in a combo format. This album still ranks as a sensational coup, and a reminder of how potent CTI was at its peak

Gene Russell - Talk To My Lady

Gene Russell was the founder of the 'Black Jazz' label, and as well as playing on other artists releases he also released a couple of his own. Here he's at his funky best on electric and acoustic piano – and the group is a nicely expanded unit that includes some extra percussion, plus guitar by Calvin keys, both of which add a tight kick to Gene's work on Fender Rhodes! All the added percussion gives the record a quality that's quite different than the usual 70s piano outing, especially trio-based sessions

What's it all about?

This blog was an open window on one of my hobbies, that being - Quadraphonic Sound. Unsure what that is?, then follow the link.

This is a list of recordings I have in my collection, from self decoded albums using my own developed, accurate decoding process's

The Decode Process's

The two main 'matrix' quadraphonic systems were SQ and QS and, in the 70's, were decoded using hardware decoders. There have been none manufactured since then, so we've needed to find another way to decode these albums.

It has become easier to do this using the powerful computers we have nowadays, and although there have been previous attempts to decoded them, there has always been issues regarding phase errors, poor seperation, poor image placement etc.

During October of 2011 I decided to take a fresh look at correcting these issues, and in November started releasing albums in the new process's, "SQ*Final" and "QS-Final".

To celebrate SQ*Final's first birthday, I decided to improved it using principles developed while working on decoding the EV & DY matrix systems. This is called SQ*Final/I.

At the begining of 2013 I created the /I/I processes, which are superiour in every way to any other form of decoding SQ & QS, including hardware

Kellee Patterson - Maiden Voyage

Maiden Voyage is edgier and more challenging than her subsequent soul-oriented albums, while being the most mainstream recording ever issued on the Black Jazz imprint, boasting little of the label's signature deep-groove swagger. The album's late-night, neon-lit atmosphere nevertheless does right by Patterson's sultry if slight vocals, although at times the material seems to require a more aggressive interpretation

Heaven & Earth - Refuge

Pat Gefell and Jo D Andrews were the New York based folk-pop duo 'Heaven & Earth', who only recorded one album for Ovation in 1973, before consigning themselves to being an almost forgotten footnote in the history of music.

Mix wise, it's another non-discrete (dare i say 'modern') mix that adds to the feel of the music rather than the 'four-to-the wall' type that would certainly be a distraction.

Nine Days Wonder - We Never Lost Control

Formed as far back as 1966, this group recorded their wild debut album (between Zappa, Soft Machine, Crimson and Purple, if you can picture that!!) as a fairly international quintet (4 different nationalities between the five of them) before breaking up the following year, with their sax player, John Earle joining Gnidoilog for their classic Lady Lake.

Singer-drummer Seyffer then joined the group Medusa, which soon became the second line-up of NDW and by the start of 73, they were recording their We Never Lost Control, which was more conventional prog, of which Nektar comes to mind. (from Progarchives.com)

John Coltrane - Infinity

Infinity is a remixed album credited to John Coltrane featuring overdubs with strings of Coltrane's pieces recorded in 1965 and 1966, at the hands of Alice Coltrane. Her controversial "re-imagining" of her husband's late works was criticised by both fans and critics, as she took his original performances and superimposed them over lush orchestral backgrounds and re-dubbed rhythm section parts, as well as recording new solos on piano, organ, harp and timpani.

Hesperion XX - El Barroco Espanol

This album contains a selection of Spanish secular music from the baroque period. The ensemble is small and intimate with Montserrat Figueras, soprano, together with a fine quartet of musicians: Ton Koopman on harpsichord, Hopkinson Smith on guitar and theorbo, Christophe Coin, on viol, and, of course, Jordi Savall on viol as well.. The pieces are almost all scored differently, ranging from solo harpsichord pieces (the Toccata and Gallarda by Cabanilles), to pieces for viol and guitar (Martín y Coll's Diferencias sobre las Follas, a set of variations on the famous La Folia theme), to songs with soprano and instruments

Alceu Valença & Geraldo Azevedo - Self Titled

There's quite a bit of confusion on the internet regarding this album, so here's the facts. This was the duo's first album, which was self-titled, and was released on the Copacabana label. The rather over-large 'quadrafonico' on the front meant it was a Quad recording (many think it's the title) and was SQ encoded.

If this Brazilian duo is unknown to you, here a little more info

Rhoda Scott - Live At The Club Saint-Germain

One of the grooviest albums ever from organist Rhoda Scott – a hip, double-length set recorded at the Club Saint Germain in Paris on May 16th & 17th 1974 – often with a good deal of funk in the mix! Rhoda's working here in a slightly expanded version of her usual format – her own Hammond organ in the lead, plus drums from Cees Kranenburg and tenor sax from Leo Johnson – the last of which makes for a wonderful addition to the groove! Most tracks are quite long, and build with a good sense of energy – almost jamming at times, with the drums used much more heavily than on other Scott albums. And Johnson's sax is great too – bringing in a sharper edge that really deepens the soul, and helps show a side of Rhoda that wasn't always caught on record at the time.

Mozart - Bastien Und Bastienne

Bastien und Bastienne was one of Mozart's earliest single act operas, written in 1768 when he was only twelve years old. It was allegedly commissioned by Viennese physician and 'magnetist' Dr. Anton Mesmer (who himself would later be parodied in Così fan tutti) as a satire of the 'pastoral' genre then prevalent, and specifically as a parody of the opera Le devin du village by Jean-Jacques Rousseau. After its supposed premiere in Mesmer's garden theatre (that is only corroborated by an unverified account of Nissen), it was not revived again until 1890, when it was performed on the 2nd October at the Architektenhaus in Berlin.

By a curious coincidence, the opening melody of the overture is almost identical to that of Beethoven's Third Symphony, the Eroica. However, as the piece lay unperformed until long after that symphony was written, this appears to be chance rather than plagiarism.

SYNOPSIS:

Bastienne pines for her sweetheart Bastien who has left for the city. While she has been tending her sheep, Bastien has been seduced by the shine and glamour of both the city and a wealthy lady. Upon the recommendation of Colas, when Bastien returns Bastienne plays hard-to-get so cruelly that the distraught and ill-loving Bastien is brought to the brink of suicide. Finally realising their transcendent love, the two shepherders discard pretence and reaffirm their mutual love for each other.

Azteca - Azteca

Azteca was a Latin jazz-rock-fusion group formed in 1972, started by Coke Escovedo and his brother Pete Escovedo, who had played on Santana III (1971). Azteca was the first large-scale attempt to combine multiple musical elements in the context of a Latin orchestra setting, and featured horns, woodwinds, multiple keyboards, three vocalists, guitars, drums, and multiple Latin percussionists.

Barbara Streisand - Live Concert At The Forum

This release is from an SQ encoded CD. I have the original SQ album as well as a rip of it sent by someone, and on testing, decodes from the LP and CD were almost identical, with the CD decode being cleaner, which is normal.

I've heard many complain that the SQ version of this album has nothing on the rears. Well, remember it's a live concert, and although the rears may not be overly active, they are far from silent.

Klemmer was one of the jazz forces of the hippie era that could appeal to peyote munching college dropouts one moment and more mature jazz fans the next. Mythos - Dreamlab

Similar to the works of several other fellow artists on the Kosmische Musik label, the album develops a science fiction concept around the story of an extraterrestrial visitor on a journey to Earth. Dreamlab is predominantly made up of peaceful and relaxed music. The metre is often determined by echoes from flutes and guitar riffs backed by expansive mellotron arrangements. The song "Expeditions" was used as the soundtrack for the film Die Superspinne.

Miguel Gallardo - Autorretrato

This 'single inventory release' album was released in Spain on the EMI/Harvest label in 1975 and limited numbers finally arrived in the UK in 1977, which is when I purchased it. My copy has been well played, and as it wasn't the best of pressings to start with, I have been holding off releasing it.

I recently found out that it had a limited release on CD in 1994, which has (like the LP) become quite rare, but I've managed to track down a copy, which was the source used for this release.

For those who are 'sensitive' to Non-English language albums, I'd best warn you this is in Spanish. But if you let that get in the way, you'll be missing out on some great songs, even though the album clocks in at a shade under 27 minutes!

What's it all about?

This blog was an open window on one of my hobbies, that being - Quadraphonic Sound. Unsure what that is?, then follow the link.

This is a list of recordings I have in my collection, from self decoded albums using my own developed, accurate decoding process's

The Decode Process's

The two main 'matrix' quadraphonic systems were SQ and QS and, in the 70's, were decoded using hardware decoders. There have been none manufactured since then, so we've needed to find another way to decode these albums.

It has become easier to do this using the powerful computers we have nowadays, and although there have been previous attempts to decoded them, there has always been issues regarding phase errors, poor separation, poor image placement etc.

During October of 2011 I decided to take a fresh look at correcting these issues, and in November started releasing albums in the new process's, "SQ*Final" and "QS-Final".

To celebrate SQ*Final's first birthday, I decided to improve it using principles developed while working on decoding the EV & DY matrix systems. This is called SQ*Final/I.

At the beginning of 2013 I created the /II processes, which are superior in every way to any other form of decoding SQ & QS, including hardware

David Bedford - Instructions For Angels

This album is better known as the only mainstream album released in 'Matrix H', although it was meant to be the first of a series of Quad albums to be released by Virgin, but the BBC's decision to replace 'H' with the incompatible 'HJ' in the autumn of 1977 meant the project was brought to a sudden end.

Fortunately it was released in France in SQ, which is the source for this release

decoders, and are the end of my research into decoding them.

Work is continuing on improving the pre-process's used before decoding takes place, so as to ensure as accurate decode is achieved, along with work on decoding the following systems:

UHQ (Accurate)
DY
EV-4
Matrix H
Matrix HJ
BMX (UD-4)

S.Arima & Misty Sounds - Dock Of The Bay

This album is very much of its time, being of the Hammond/Moog/Backing Band style. After a search through the Internet, this particular album popped up in many peoples lists, and all played it in stereo. So, for those who enjoy a taste of nostalgia (and I'll admit, I enjoyed listening to it), here it is in all of its Quadraphonic glory.....

Absolute Elsewhere - In Search Of Ancient Gods

Never heard of it? Well, it's a one-off album that mixed early electronic music with jazz tinged rock, and although released under a group name, it was in fact a solo album by Paul Fishman, who utilised the talents of Bill Bruford, Philip Saatchi, Jon Astrop & Kim Mackrell to bring it all together. Definitely worth a listen

Something of a rarity in that it's one of the few UK produced CD-4 albums, and very much "Third Time Lucky", as the previous two copies Malcolm tried were too noisy to be usable.

Martinů - The Epic of Gilgamesh

Based on the Babylonian poem of the third century B.C., this late work in three parts for soloists, speaker, chorus, and orchestra is part sacred cantata, part secular oratorio, part instrumental symphony, and always very strange. Its themes are uncanny but unforgettable, its harmonies are tonal but unconventional, its sonorities are stark but radiant, its forms are flexible but monumental, and its whole effect is distinctly disquieting.

Omega - 200 Years After The Last War

This is the classic album from Hungarian band "Omega" released in English by German label Bellaphon, after it was banned in their home country due to it's heavy political nature.

Although it consists of only four tracks, the first, "Suite", took up all of side one, clocking in at 20 minutes. Side two started with, what is a classic synth lead fest of the time, "Help To Find Me" and is their "Lucky Man", still being played in their live concerts to this day. The title track has a line that, to this day, sends a shiver down my spine: "One of them has given life to you. One of them, sure will bury you". I suspect this track didn't go down too well with the communist dictatorship of the time!

If there is one issue some have with Omega's English releases, that would be the singer's rather heavy hungarian accent, but if you can get past this, you'll find they are strong on melody and musicianship. This album would certainly be on my "Desert Island Disc" list.
